

Abstract

The invention relates to a device for detecting the parameters of an aerosol, in particular in inhalation therapy devices, whereby light is shone through a translucent material but not through a transparent material in a detection region and is detected and analysed by means of two receivers.